AFFECTIONATELY DEDICATED

To my grandmother-in-law, Ramona Jeanette Sawyer Barth, better known to my family simply as "GG" (for Great Grandmother), circumspect supporter of most of my pursuits, who first drew my attention to the illustrious Sawyer ancestry, and to the works of her distinguished and prolific father, Roland Douglas Sawyer. Little did she suspect what she was getting me into.

THANKS TO ALL THOSE WHO HELPED

No work of this magnitude can be accomplished without the considerable help of a great number of people. The family information on all those families whose members were born after 1928 was most often contributed by individuals in those families. These individuals are too numerous to mention separately. In addition, however, there were some people who contributed much more extensively.

The first of these was, of course, the late Roland Douglas Sawyer of Kensington, N.H. whose original genealogy of the Thomas Sawyer Family of Hill, N.H. published in pamphlet form in 1928, inspired this present work, and has been incorporated here more or less in its entirety. One has to spend some time working seriously at genealogy before he or she can begin to appreciate the scope of Roland Douglas Sawyer's achievement in this work. This is especially true in view of the fact that he performed his research without the aid of any "modern" tools whatever, except for a typewriter. One can only wonder what he might have accomplished had he had computers, modems, telephones, faxes, microfilm, video, microfiche, Xerox copiers, and so on.

From time to time others have commented to me that they were aware of many mistakes and errors in this genealogy. Certainly there were some errors, which I have endeavored to correct as I learned of them throughout my research. However, my own view is that the overall work was incredibly accurate, and that the errors were relatively few, and often of limited significance. No work of genealogy can ever be 100% accurate. Often one works with old handwritten texts and transcription errors occur. People use various names throughout their lives, and thus their names are often variously reported, and so on. Furthermore, genealogy depends for the most part on the accurate reporting of historical facts by large numbers of people. Yet sometimes people have a stake in history being recorded inaccurately, either because they dislike someone, are angry with someone, or because of some aspect of the true record that they rightly or wrongly feel ashamed or embarrassed about. As a result, it is not so rare for genealogical facts to be reported falsely on purpose. These are among the many factors that often undermine a genealogists best intentions to achieve 100% accuracy. It is in the nature of critics to imply that they could have done a better job themselves. Unfortunately, the same critics are always absent when the original work is being done.

The following are some who were not absent when the original work was being done: Roland D. Sawyer's granddaughter, Nathalie Smith Potts, who helped extensively on the Calvin Sawyer branch and provided advice and encouragement; Calvin and Mary Lou Winroth, who provided all the data on the Luther Sawyer branch in its entirety; Howard U. Gant Sr., who provided extensive help on the Thomas W. Sawyer branch; Arlene Sherbut Clark and Martha Lockhard, who provided extensive help on the Meshack Sawyer branch; David Prescott, Andrew Leighton, and Sammie Morrison, who provided extensive help on the Mary Ann Sawyer branch; and again David Prescott and Milah Dwight, who provided extensive help with the Orrin Sawyer branch. And lastly, my wife, Natasha Ramona Salvo, great granddaughter of Roland Douglas Sawyer, and granddaughter of Ramona Jeanette Sawyer Barth, who, though not fascinated with genealogy, nonetheless usually supports my life in innumerable ways, and my two sons, Julian Joseph and Simon Barth, who, though they do not yet comprehend genealogy, are nonetheless an inspiration.

INTRODUCTION - WHY GENEALOGY ?

Anyone who has ever done serious genealogy soon learns that genealogists are in a small minority, which is usually regarded by the majority as being unduly preoccupied with a fairly frivolous pursuit. Thus, many genealogies begin with some form of apologia in which the writer attempts to explain or justify how he has come to be afflicted with an obsessional interest in family history.

In my own case, as recently as fifteen years ago, I had no knowledge of Genealogy as a field of serious academic pursuit, and no interest in it, nor had I ever heard of the Sawyer family. I first set out to increase my very minimal knowledge of my own immediate family. This gradually grew into a more serious interest, as I accumulated more and more information. Then, when I married and had children, and began to think about my own two sons, my interest naturally extended to their ancestry and my wife's family. Thus, in some sense, I inherited the Sawyer family by marrying into it. People often ask why I would become involved so extensively. Answers to such questions are often complex. I believe it is true that one will almost always begin with an emotional interest in the idea of family and where one comes from. But in addition to this, there is also the idea of simple curiosity, the drive to discover the limits of what is knowable about any subject, and the drive simply to explore beyond the generally accepted "surface of things." As the old childhood riddle goes, "Why did the bear climb the mountain?" . . . Why to see what he could see, of course! Then there is the idea of skill. One often gets satisfaction from doing something that one feels or comes to recognize one is good at. Work in Genealogy is easier if one has a wide range of skills, such as with computers, modern information systems, library and other research skills, verbal communications skills, and so forth. All of these can of course be acquired. However, if one possess such skills at the outset, it will make progress in Genealogical research that much easier and thus more satisfying. Finally, there is an element of enjoying detective work and sorting out mysteries.

Now if a person starts out with all of the above to explore a little genealogy, he may one day discover that he has accumulated far more information than he ever expected would be possible. And once having discovered this, he may wish to preserve this information for future descendants who might be interested and/or share it with a wider present-day audience. However small that audience might be, it is a great satisfaction when a reader discovers detailed answers to his questions, without having to perform years of independent research himself. For this reason, only in the last year or so did I start to think about the possibility of publishing my work on the Sawyer family. I absolutely did not start out with any such objective in mind, and did not think much about it until recently. In fact, I began my Sawyer work out of a feeling of being impressed with Roland D. Sawyer's work, and with a desire to bring it back alive a little, by perhaps extending it down to "our" present. This was at least fifty percent curiosity to simply see what was possible. I think this must be true for many who publish genealogies, namely that they discover after the fact that they have succeeded almost by accident in accumulating much more information than they thought possible at the outset.

ROLAND D. SAWYER - THE FIRST HISTORIAN OF THE HILL, N.H. SAWYERS

Roland D. Sawyer is best known for his political career. He spent twenty-eight years as a Massachusetts legislator from 1913 to 1941. In fact, he is said to have been a Massachusetts legislator for longer than any other Massachusetts legislator before or since. He also ran for governor in 1913, and for Congress in 1924 and 1942, losing all three elections. He was also well known as a Congregationalist minister, and at the time of his death at age 95, he was thought to be the oldest practicing Congregationalist minister in the United States. However, though less commonly known, Roland D. Sawyer also found time during his life to write several books on various subjects, though surprisingly, he seems not to have written any on his family's history. This subject interested him greatly, and inspired him to publish two well-known pamphlets on genealogy, in which he offered brief sketches of the lives of some of his ancestors. He published the first of these pamphlets on the Sawyer Family of Hill in 1928 when he was 54 years old. In addition to the books and pamphlets, he published a staggering number of newspaper articles throughout his very long life, including many about the early history of his family and New England. One of the hard-cover books he wrote was a history of the town of Kensington, N.H. where he was born, raised, lived off and on throughout his life, and where he is buried, in the front row next to the main street, as he had requested "So that he could keep an eye on what was going on."

Several members of Roland D. Sawyer's family who frequented his house in Kensington during the latter part of his life have described how it was filled in almost every corner with books and papers. He valued these papers greatly, and was concerned that they might be lost in a fire, so he had a small, windowless building about eight feet square built of brick about a hundred yards behind his house. It had a metal door. This small building was universally known as "The Vault," and it was here that he stored many of his most valuable papers. Construction of such a vault seemed Quixotic to some, and was referred to occasionally with mild derision. However, it was also prophetic, since his house in fact did burn to the ground, after his death, whereas the vault still stands in 1994, though it has fallen into serious disrepair. After his death, most of these papers were conveyed to the University of N.H. according to his will. However, one of his earliest workbooks remained with his family, entitled simply "Scrap Book No. 1 of My Ancestry 1903 - 1934." This appears to be a source book for many of his Genealogical writings, and is now in the safekeeping of one of his grandchildren, Nathalie Smith Potts, who loaned it to me, together with two other scrap books.

These scrap books contain a collection of genealogical writings, as well as many pages relating to annual Sawyer Family Reunions for those years. I noticed with interest that Roland D. Sawyer had published at least three different series of newspaper articles relating to his family's early history. The first of these was entitled "Betfield Sawyer of Hill." The badly yellowed news clippings were glued into the scrap book with no reference to what paper had published them. The second series was entitled "History of Earlier Hampton." The third series was entitled "Early Days in Hill."

All of these genealogical writings overlap somewhat with each other, and in some cases, with the first few pages of the 1928 pamphlet. Therefore, I have combined a large number of these writings, which I have included here following my own introduction. For the most part I have quoted his own texts verbatim to retain as much as possible the colorful style and character of Roland D. Sawyer's originals. However, I have removed overlapping paragraphs and other redundancies, and made other minor editorial changes to weave the many disparate pieces into a more readable whole. I have not included every article, but only those that seemed most interesting from the viewpoint of family history.

Though few today have probably read any works of Roland D. Sawyer, his literary output was prodigious, and he was exceptionally well-educated, though largely self-taught. Though I myself have seen none of his papers at the University of N.H., and have read only his one book on Kensington, and the three scrapbooks I have had in my home for a while, these are to me quite incredible in their depth. For example, in 1927 alone, on page 157 of one of the books, he catalogs his literary efforts for that year and states he read 133 books. Earlier, in the year 1924, when he is 50, only slightly more than halfway through his long life, he catalogs his writings in detail, offering this preface:

> "The wealth of most people is in money and property - mine is in my stock of literary collect, and the information in my head. Joyful labor is its own reward, and the years I have spent in learning things, in writing down and collecting facts, this all repays me for the countless hours of labor thus spent. From those far-back days when Gram got me a new pencil from Rufe Hilliard and gave me paper to 'mark and write' down to the present when I crack the typewriter keys a half day to write my recent essay on the klan - I get paid for it all in the joy of theperformance."

The following is an abbreviated list of Roland Sawyer's "collect" at age 50: 4 books, 11 Knowlton booklets, 30 scrap books of Running Narrative of Life, 25 Literary scrap books, 30 scrap books of brochures of writings, 15 duplicate scrap books, 50 typed brochures, a series of diaries since 1895, 5 boxes of news clippings containing personal work and mention, 60 letters to press, 40 poems, 242 sermons and papers, 28 addresses, 88 newspapers articles, 266 (more) sermons, 88 (more) studies and addresses, 90 (more) poems, and 915 pieces in newspapers. All this from a man educated only in a small rural public school, who was first raised to the trade of shoemaking, and who did not even leave home in Kensington to study for the ministry until he was already aged 21 years.

It seemed to me that Roland Sawyer's feeling for the subject of family history was unusually palpable, and I was touched by this. Unfortunately, neither the scope nor present subject of this book can encompass more than a few tiny extracts from the writings of this extraordinarily prolific man. However, I thought it worthwhile to try to include some insights into the motivations of a genealogist, since so many seem perplexed by an interest in this subject.

> "How little we know of our ancestors [wrote Roland Sawyer]. We have recollections of grand parents, and a few traditions of great grand parents, but back of that is only a record of names. The record is as meaningless as that in Genesis, where we read of the Patriarchs: They were born, married, begat children, and died. All this shows the average ingratitude of the human being. It was the struggles and sacrifices of those ancestors that enabled us to exist and enjoy, and yet they are to us unknown, or else mere links in a genealogical chain. It would seem that to search out some record of the lives of one's ancestry were then only a decent filial respect. And especially ought we to do this here in America, where the oldest family is but ten generations old."

Simply put, I think an interest in genealogy has to do with reaching a deeper understanding of one's connectedness not merely to history, but to the infinitely broader tapestry of the life of the human species. Again quoting from Roland Sawyer in 1934, age 60:

> "Facing death since I had the break down in health at 18, I have passed through many different moods as to the disposition of my dead body. At that first time I favored cremation, and in 1895 visited Forest Hills Crematory, and wrote praising such idea. Then came my rapture with Nature in 1907, and I felt with Thoreau, 'With joy shall I delight to be buried in it.' Now as I grow old, I think of sleeping with my kin, and think how good would be the small square plot in the front corner of the cemetery, between Amos Rowell and the end - (with the highway sign removed)."

And thus it came to pass, too, though not yet for thirty four more years, exactly as he had described.

A peaceful spot for endless rest,
Is yonder church-yard shade.
A spot my happy past has blessed -
There let my clay be laid.

There near the ancient house of God,
Where once in childhood hours,
So many times my bare feet trod
O'er grass and summer flowers.

The spot is surely hallowed ground,
For there my kindred lay -
And there in tears we gathered round
When they were laid away.

Calm and peaceful is the thought,
When comes life's end and I shall die,
My worn-out body will be brought
Here with my kin to lie.

Happy indeed are they who rest
In the home town graveyard plot,
A place which love and hope have blessed
With faith the fathers taught.

A peaceful spot for endless rest
Where friends shall lay my flesh away,
Mid scenes the happy past has blessed,
Will peaceful sleep this worn out clay.

JAY NORWALK, THE PRESENT WRITER

Writers and researchers are usually intertwined with their subject matter in mysterious ways, so I am including here a brief sketch of my own life and ancestry. I was born in New York City on February 27, 1940. My father, Edward Norwalk, was an attorney, also born in New York City in 1904. My father's family was Jewish. My grandfather was born Jacob Nowak in Ciechocinek, Poland, and my grandmother was born Dora Heilperin in Suwalki, Poland. These two towns were about 100 miles apart, and both at the time were in Russia, which controlled most of Poland for almost all of the 19th Century. Another of my father's ancestral families were the Eilenbergs, through my great grandmother Ziesel Eilenberg. Both my father's parents came to America at almost the same time in 1889, met in New York, married late in 1899, and had five children.

My mother was Christine Hennessy, born in New York in 1905. My mother seems to have been raised Episcopalian. My mother's father was David W. Hennessy, born in New York in 1864, while my maternal grandmother was Frances Lebaron Beyer, born in Belgium in 1867, who met my grandfather on a ship to America in 1899, when he was returning from a year studying painting in Paris. They married a short time later, and also had five children.

My grandfather Hennessy died quite young at age 42 in 1906, thirty-four years before my birth, of alcoholism some say. My grandmother Frances lived on until 1935, yet also died five years before my birth. My grandfather Jacob became a tremendous success in the manufacture of women's clothing, yet killed himself shortly after the stock market crash of 1929, eleven years before my birth, fearing he was losing all his money. He was wrong. Of my four grandparents, I knew only my father's mother Dora, who died when I was about fifteen. My mother became depressed not long after my birth, and was institutionalized, for life as it turned out. I was sent away to a special boarding school when I was five years of age. Though mine was not the easiest of childhoods, I mention this primarily to explain how it came to be that I knew so little about my own family. Family knowledge is taken for granted by most people. However not all of us grow up with it.

After grade school near Poughkeepsie N.Y., I attended a Quaker boarding school in Pennsylvania, graduating high school in 1958. Next, I attended Harvard College, receiving a BA in Literature in 1962. Upon graduation, I joined the Air Force on active duty and spent five years during the Viet Nam War as a pilot flying B-52 aircraft from Dow Air Force Base in Bangor, Maine. I left the Air Force in 1967 with the rank of Captain, and attended The Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration for two years, receiving an MBA degree in 1970. Afterwards I worked as a management consultant for several years, both in Washington D.C. primarily for the federal government, and in Boston working with private sector clients. I also worked in several small business situations including real estate, renovations, and wholesale import of herbs and spices.

In about 1977 I liquidated what assets I had accumulated and bought a forty foot sailboat called "Daybreak," which I sailed most of the next five years back and forth to the Caribbean, accumulating about 25,000 sea miles, about three quarters of which I sailed alone offshore. Returning to Boston from the sailing life, I started a computer business which prospered for about ten years. I married Natasha Ramona Salvo in 1987, when our first son, Julian Joseph Norwalk was also born. In 1989 our second son, Simon Barth Norwalk was born. As of 1995, we are still living in Newton, MA. However, amidst all of these activities of the past ten years we have somehow managed to find time to build a house in Newcastle, Maine, and also a house on the island of Saba in the West Indies.

WILLIAM SAWYER, BORN 1615 IN ENGLAND

The earliest Sawyer ancestor about whom we have good documentation is William Sawyer, born about 1613, possibly in Lincolnshire, England according to some authorities, or possibly in Berkshire according to some others. William Sawyer is said to have been the son of John Sawyer, born about 1582. However, Eleanor Sawyer, a Sawyer historian and scholar whose eight hundred page genealogy of Sawyers will be published this fall, lived in England for several years and went to Lincolnshire to look for the John Sawyer connection and could not find it. William Sawyer was a farmer, who arrived Massachusetts in about 1636 and went first to Ipswich. Several writers have thought that he came in the ship Hopewell. However, recent searches of passenger lists have not yet found his name on any ship. In any case, he was established in Salem four years later in 1640, and by 1644 he was in Newbury.

There are at least six previously published accounts of the early history of the Sawyer family in New England, and Sawyers are mentioned prominently in many genealogies and histories of early America. William was among the earliest European settlers of America, arriving only 16 years after the first "Pilgrim" settlers arrived at Plymouth in 1620. After the first harsh winter of 1620 during which exactly half of the 102 passengers and crew of the Mayflower died, the flow of English settlers to New England increased steadily until by 1632 it is estimated that a total of about 3000 settlers had reached the Massachusetts Bay Area. This expansion was facilitated, according to Roland D. Sawyer, by the fact that the local Native American population had been infected with smallpox in 1615 and in 1616 by John Smith's sailors, which very rapidly reduced the Native American population from an estimated 15,000 to probably less than 2000. Two other men named Sawyer arrived at about the same time as William, one named Edward Sawyer born 1608, the other named Thomas Sawyer born 1616. These two are surmised to be brothers of William Sawyer, though no proof has yet been found.

William Sawyer became one of the founders of the town of Newbury, Massachusetts. Newbury and other towns in the area were modeled after English Towns of the period. These English towns were especially notable for their careful record keeping, which was superior to most other European countries of the time. Thus, rather excellent and extensive documentation exists for the first several generations of settlers. However, as control over the new territories was consolidated, settlers expanded outward in all directions founding many new towns, and sometimes subsequent record keeping was not as well maintained as in the early generations. Thus, genealogical records of all kinds for the 18th Century are not as available as for the 17th Century.

William Sawyer Sr. of Newbury had twelve children, eight of whom survived to adulthood, married and had children. These eight were: John, Samuel, Ruth (who married Benjamin Morse), Sarah (who married Joshua Brown), William, Mary (who married John Emery), Stephen (the great great grandfather of our ancestor Thomas Sawyer of Hill), and Frances (who married Thomas Treadwell). These eight children produced altogether forty-six grandchildren for William Sawyer who survived to adulthood and married, so that by the end of the 17th Century, the William Sawyer family was a very large and well-established family in New England, not only in the Newbury-Hampton-Kensington area, but also throughout the State of Maine. One can easily understand that if as many as three hundred years ago, in about the year 1700, there were already forty-six distinct, adult "branches" of the family of William Sawyer Sr., that there might be today many, many quite distant living relatives. In fact, just among the descendants of Thomas Sawyer there are a very large number of William's 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th generation descendants alive in 1994, who are documented in this book. Imagine if all the descendants of the forty-six families of 1700 were carried down to the present. Using a computer database of ninety million adult Americans with published telephones alive in 1994, we find 17,034 people with the name of Sawyer. Perhaps forty percent of these might be assumed to be spouses of Sawyers, rather than Sawyer descendants. However that forty percent could perhaps be assumed to be approximately equal to the Sawyer minor children alive in 1994 not listed in the database. At all events, seventeen thousand is the best guesstimate we have of the Sawyer descendants alive in America in 1994, these being descendants not only of William, but of his two possible brothers who arrived as early as he did, plus whatever other persons named Sawyer may have immigrated after these first three arrived. One genealogist has stated that Sawyer is today the 75th commonest name in New England.

BETFIELD SAWYER AND HILL, NEW HAMPSHIRE IN 1995

This present work concerns itself only with the descendants of one of the probably very large number of William Sawyer descendants living yet one hundred years later at the beginning of the 19th Century, namely William Sawyer's great great grandson, Betfield Sawyer. For the moment I will gloss over the details of Betfield's life since they are covered later. However, as a young man, Betfield Sawyer traveled from Southern N.H. where he was born in Newton, to Central N.H. to the region then known as New Chester. This land was first surveyed in 1753 by a team of sixteen men led by John Tolford, according to Calvin Winroth, who has delved deeply into the history of the land holdings in this area. They established regular lots of about 100 acres, measuring 80 rods by 200 rods. In 1763 there were only three settlers in the area, who apparently returned south. By 1767 there were two permanent settlers, Captain Cutting Favor and John Tolford Jr. By 1773, only six years later, there were thirty seven male land owners in the region, and in 1778 the town was officially incorporated as New Chester, which it remained until it was renamed in 1837 as Hill, N.H., in honor of Governor Isaac Hill. When Betfield arrived there with his family in the winter of about 1799, there were said to be only sixty eight families living in the region.

Roland D. Sawyer wrote that it was the long series of European wars between the English and the French, which were carried over into the North American "colonies," causing almost continuous warfare in Northern New England between 1689 and 1763 known as the French and Indian Wars, which in turn kept northern New Hampshire from settlement by the English for a long time. After peace came in 1763, the French withdrew into Canada, and a large portion of northern New England became safe for settlement for the first time. During this period many people from southern N.H. and other parts of New England moved north in search of new lands. They often traveled in winter as Betfield did, using oxen to pull heavy sleighs. This was the easiest and most reliable way to move heavy tools, food supplies, and other necessary equipment in the absence of decent roads and bridges.

A contemporary map of the region is shown on the adjacent page. Betfield first owned land in Section 17. One section contained 200 acres. Over the next several decades, Sawyers bought and sold many small parcels of land in the region. Calvin Winroth spent several days going through all the deeds and land records he could find, and succeeded in tracing about three quarters of these transactions. Betfield Sawyer built a farm, and eventually two of his sons settled close by. Betfield's son Thomas built a farm, and Betfield's son David built a sawmill. Although the two farms and the sawmill have long ago fallen in and disappeared, and the forest has grown back, the foundation holes and stone foundations still remain in 1995 to mark the exact locations of these dwellings. Thankfully an excellent photograph of Thomas Sawyer's farm taken in 1903 has survived, which helps make a positive identification of that site possible today, despite the fact the stone walls appear almost a foot higher in the photograph. In the past century the annual falling of the leaves has increased the topsoil, filling in against the old stone walls. In the early 1980's the Hill Historical Society was formed, and chose as its first project the renovation of the old town hall and meeting house in Hill Center, opposite the church, which was built in 1800. Recently this society has begun to prepare maps showing the exact locations of the early farms and their remains, including those of the Sawyer family.

In my view, the most interesting Sawyer site to visit in Hill is the early Sawyer burial ground, which was originally on Betfield Sawyer's farm, and where he and his immediate family are buried. Astonishingly, while the buildings have all disappeared entirely, several of the gravestones have escaped the ravages of time almost entirely, and appear in almost original condition, and are far better preserved than many gravestones of much later manufacture. This is possibly because they appear to be made of slate, which perhaps weathers better than other types of stone. Furthermore, the craftsmanship of the engraving appears to be of an unusually high quality, and two of the stones are quite large and dramatic in size, and contain several lines of poetry. On Betfield's stone appears the following verse . . .

"Reader,
Go praise your God, believe on his son,
Twas he who died, for all as one.
His death for all, is not in vain,
For all who die, shall live again."

Roland D. Sawyer visited Hill at least several times as a young man, including in 1903, when he took the photo of the Thomas Sawyer farm reproduced in this book, and in 1909, when he first copied down in his scrapbook the inscriptions on the gravestones in the Sawyer Cemetery. He visited the site again in about 1918, when his daughter Ramona was a little girl. A description of this visit appears later in this book. At that time he took some photographs of the cemetery, which though not very clear, show that the land surrounding the cemetery was then still largely cleared of trees. In 1918 Betfield's house was still standing, with two or three rooms still usable, though the house was badly run down. Thomas's house a half mile away was also standing at the time, as shown in the 1903 photograph. But since there were no longer any people living close by, the woods grew up quickly to such an extent that when Roland D. Sawyer returned a decade or two later, he was no longer able to find the cemetery. The site was in fact lost until about 1982, when Nathalie Potts and her sister, Barbara Powers, advertised in local newspapers for anyone who could lead them to the place. Fortunately one local resident did respond to this add, and the location again became known to Sawyer descendants. When first "rediscovered," it was so overgrown as to make it especially hard to find. Since that time, the Sawyer Association has paid a small fee of $25. each year to the Town of Hill, which has kindly agreed to keep the site somewhat clear of vegetation.

The result of these efforts has been to restore the site to a state of great beauty. I have visited my share of cemeteries, and I am not especially interested in them. However, this Sawyer cemetery seems unusual to me. The place itself has become one of great natural beauty. There are no other signs of civilization for miles in any direction. The trees in and around the cemetery have grown up quite large, providing a heavily shaded woodland setting, in which, on clear days, sunlight dapples through onto the ground in bright patches. The forest floor in the immediate area has been well cleared of brush, and some ground-covering plant has taken root, providing bright green contrast with the reddish brown of the pine needles. The overall effect is one of unusual tranquillity, suffused with the redolent piney smell of the woods. There is also a feeling of aesthetic simplicity, where these several large, clearly readable stones rise dramatically amidst an otherwise seemingly virgin landscape, undisturbed by all other signs of human presence. In fact, it is now hard to believe that close by, less than 150 years ago, most of the surrounding land was cleared for fields, and two large families were born and raised for two generations. One cannot help reflecting on the ephemeral nature of human existence, seeing that almost all signs of this bustling activity have so quickly disappeared, leaving behind only these elegant stone markers. Such reflections are also inspired by the simple inscriptions on the stones, thought to be the work of Betfield's son David, who in mid-life became known as a preacher. One such inscription is on the stone of Betfield's son Luther . . .

"This world I once delighted to see,
As I am now, you soon must be.
As you are now, so once was I,
In body formed of dust, to suffer and to die.
But now the spirit to God has risen,
The same as yours soon must be in heaven."

Such verses may not have been wholly original with David Sawyer, and were more likely simply typical of verse found on gravestones of the period. Nevertheless, they impart slightly more of the spirit of the people laid to rest in that place than the simple dates themselves would do, and I think they add significantly to the impression conveyed by the place. Unfortunately, Luther's stone, while still very clear, was broken in two at some earlier period, and now lies flat on top his grave. Another simple inscription that made an impression on me was on the gravestone of Hannah Thompson, Betfield's wife, which still stands erect next to her husband's . . .

"Clay to clay and dust to dust,
Let them mingle, for they must.
But look aloft, the spirit's risen,
The grave cannot the soul imprison."

There are probably four or five other graves clearly visible still, including that of David Sawyer's two young children, Luther B. B. and Mary H. E., and Betfield's daughter Mary Loverin. A careful inspection might discover some others. Many of the rest of the Sawyers who came afterwards are buried perhaps ten miles away in the East Andover Cemetery. This includes Thomas Sawyer and his wife Juanna, their two younger unmarried children, Betfield and Betsy, as well as Thomas's son Luther Sawyer and his two wives and two of their children and the wife of one. Thomas's daughter Isabelle Sawyer Parker and her husband James are also buried in East Andover. There are doubtless some more distant kin buried there as well. And about a half mile away in the church yard is the grave of Thomas and Juanna's son, Thomas Warren Sawyer and one of his wives, Lucy Sleeper.

As it is not impossible that the Betfield Sawyer cemetery might be lost again in the future, I am recording here some relatively detailed directions to find it, without which the first-time visitor might have difficulty. From Boston, driving time is about two and a half hours. Take Interstate 93 North to the Franklin or Tilton Exits. From Franklin, N.H. take Route 3A North to Hill. Hill is very small, and you can miss it unless you are paying attention. From the Hill General Store continue North on Route 3A 1 mile to a left turn onto Murray Hill Road.

From this turn you will be climbing continually on a good black-top road, which eventually becomes a good dirt road. After 2.2 miles you will reach the Hill Historical Society Building on your left, which is opposite a white church on your right dated 1800. Bear left onto Currier Road, and after one mile you will pass the Ferrin Cemetery on your left. After this it is about one more mile to a fork where you must bear left again, then another mile to a "T". At this point, go left for about one tenth mile and you will find a good logging road to your right at the base of a moderately steep hill. Park here, and walk to the right on the logging road for about three tenths of a mile to a small gravel pit on your left. At this point the logging road peters out, but continue straight ahead about one tenth more miles on a fairly clear forest trail, and you will find the Betfield Sawyer Family Cemetery.

THOMAS AND JUANNA SCRIBNER SAWYER AND THEIR NEW ENGLAND ANCESTORS

Thomas Sawyer was born Jan. 24, 1796 in Newton, N.H. If we define William Sawyer as being the first generation of Sawyers in America, then Thomas Sawyer was already in the 6th Generation of Sawyers in America. Thomas Sawyer married Juanna Scribner, and like his own ancestor William of Newbury, MA, also had twelve children, one of whom was adopted, and like William, eight of these twelve had families who had children. These eight were: Calvin, Mary (who married Horace Clay), Meshack, Thomas W., Isabelle (who married James Parker), Luther, Orrin David, and Viola (adopted, who married Charles Grant). Of the other four children, Betfield died at age 17 by drowning, Betsy died at age 6, Clem married and lived to old age, but had no children, & Harvey married and had two children who both died in infancy.

As of November, 1994, we have traced 847 known descendants of Thomas and Juanna Sawyer. Some of these married 476 other people, so that the Thomas and Juanna Sawyer's descendant families total 1,321 people with their spouses. This total is estimated to be possibly 25-50 people short of the actual total, since not every last descendant has yet been traced.

Some people already familiar with Sawyer family history may question or wonder at my spelling of the name Juanna. It has numerous times been pointed out to me that her name is spelled in the more common fashion, Joanna, both on her gravestone, and on the gravestones of her two children buried beside her in East Andover, N.H. Although it is true that it is spelled Joanna on the gravestones, Roland D. Sawyer made a point of spelling it Juanna, since he said this was the way that she had spelled it herself. Thus, I have simply carried on Roland D. Sawyer's usage. To my knowledge, no one has ever found a birth record for Juanna Scribner, causing some to wonder at the legitimacy of her birth. Such a document might have shed some light on the issue of spelling. But without it, the question of spelling seems arbitrary.

Map to find Sawyer Cemetery

Of the eight children of Thomas and Juanna Sawyer who had children, we are now able to name perhaps ninety-five percent of all the descendants down to 1994. This includes the descendants of Calvin, Mary Ann, Thomas W., Meshack, Luther, and Orrin. This leaves only two of the eight who had children about whose descendants we so far know very little beyond what Roland D. Sawyer told us in 1928. These two are Isabelle (Parker), and Viola (Grant) (adopted). Of these two, Isabelle Parker probably has relatively few descendants, since a letter from Daisy Uda Sawyer dated 1947 to Roland D. Sawyer mentions that only the four children of Mary A. Parker and their children were living at that time.

What seems especially noteworthy about the Sawyer ancestors is NOT just that Roland D. Sawyer traced his family name back to 1600; but rather it is two unusual facts coming together to produce an unusually broad and complete genealogical record. The Sawyer ancestors of New England almost all lived for as long as two centuries in a relatively tight community, since arriving in America in the early 1600's. Furthermore, these ancestors entered this community exclusively, so far as we know, from England. England is itself unusual, in that it had adopted a system of keeping town records of births, marriages, and deaths sometime in the 1300's to 1400's, which was much earlier than other European countries. Thus, the towns of Hampton, Kensington, Newbury, Salisbury, Amesbury, etc., maintained the same municipal practices that their founders had known in England, and began keeping records almost from day one. This has made it easier to retrieve quite a lot of information not just about the Sawyers, whom Roland D. Sawyer researched so well, but in fact a great percentage of all of Thomas Sawyer and Juanna Scribner's ancestors back to the Seventeenth Century, and in some cases, to even the Sixteenth Century. This includes the ancestors of all those who married into Sawyer family generation by generation, and thus became themselves ancestors of succeeding generations of William Sawyer's descendants. The completeness of the overall genealogical records available for early New England is unusual. Similarly extensive records probably do not exist for most communities in the US, and probably not for most places in Europe either.

The Sawyer ancestors have been very well researched in most cases by many people, not just by Roland D. Sawyer. Many of the best known families have multiple genealogies published about them, and many more have at least one good genealogy published about them. For example, a partial listing of the best known names besides Sawyer among the ancestors of Roland D. Sawyer and his wife Mary Locke Palmer are: Austin, Batchelder, Blaisdell, Blake, Brown, Colby, Currier, Clough, Davis, Dow, Eastow, Fellows, Gove, Heath, Hobbs, Jenness, Locke, Moulton, Noyes, Osgood, Page, Palmer, Philbrick, Prescott, Rowell, Sanborn, Scribner, Silver, Thompson, Towle, Tuck, Tucker, Webster, and Worthen. Some of these names appear multiple times in the same generations of Roland and Mary Sawyer's ancestors, and can be traced back to the same couple in the early 1600's. Genealogists call this "Converging Lines." This phenomenon is one of those obvious things that most of us never think about. We take it for granted that in each farther back generation we will all have the same number of additional ancestors. However, if you were to marry your first cousin, then one pair of his or her grandparents would be the same as yours, and thus your child would have 2 parents, naturally, you and your cousin, and 4 grandparents, but only 6 great grandparents, instead of the expected 8. (If you have trouble with this, you will see it more easily if you diagram it out on paper.) Since it has never been common to marry one's first cousin, and it is even less common now than it used to be, the above example picked for simplicity seldom occurs. What does occur more frequently is that people marry their fourth or fifth cousins, often without realizing it, which causes the same reduction in their descendants total number of different ancestors, but with the delayed effect of having more generations in between. If you get more interested in genealogy you will come to understand this fairly soon, whereas if you don't, then you probably don't need to understand it.

Several examples of converging lines in Roland and Mary Sawyer's ancestry are included below. The ancestors shown in the rightmost columns are descended from a common ancestor shown to the left.

The completeness of the records available make it possible to establish not only William Sawyer as an ancestor, but also a great many other ancestors of William Sawyer's approximate generation. The table below illustrates this by listing 106 ancestors of Roland D. and Mary Sawyer living around 1600. Perhaps only about half of those listed in the following table would be ancestors of all the descendants of Thomas and Juanna Sawyer, the other half being ancestors only of a large part of the Calvin Sawyer branch. However, it is likely that a similarly large list could be made for many in the other seven branches of the Thomas Sawyer family, since many of the first two generations of Thomas and Juanna's descendants married into other well-known early American families such as Clay, Littlefield, Woodman, etc. It must be emphasized that these converging lines and surnames mentioned above are all in the ancestry of Roland D. Sawyer, but only some are in the ancestry of all Sawyer descendants mentioned in this book. I have mentioned them in detail only because they are doubtless typical of most of the Sawyers born before the start of this present century. They emphasize that the Sawyer descendants mentioned in this book have many early American ancestors, not just William Sawyer alone.

Below is a list of 106 ancestors of Roland D. Sawyer born in the early 1600's. Some of these are ancestors of all Sawyers listed in this book. Most Sawyer descendants listed in this book could probably discover a similar number of their own ancestors from the earliest days of American settlement.

To be able to know as much about one family and all its ancestors over approximately four centuries as we are able to know about the Sawyer family is fairly unusual. It is possible because of peculiar historical factors, some of which have been mentioned above, and because of the discovery and evolution of many new tools applicable to this work, which are far better than Roland D. Sawyer had prior to 1928. Some of these are the computer, the telephone, the fax machine, and CDROM disks, to mention only a few. We have much broader, easier, and quicker access to information than Roland D. Sawyer had. Earlier generations of genealogists often worked from handwritten genealogies, not even printed.

Few people ever think much about the arithmetic of human genetics. We may be aware that we look like one or both of our parents, or like one of our grandparents, but we seldom think consciously about the shockingly large number of ancestors who have made physical genetic contributions to our make-up in the relatively recent past. However, if one considers one's ancestors looking "backwards" into time, the actual numbers of total ancestors increase very quickly. For example, if we consider this writer's mother-in-law, Vanessa Barth, and say that she is in the first or "present" generation, and then count backwards by generations . . .

Vanessa Barth	1st gen	1 person
Ramona	2nd	2 people
RDS	3rd	4 people
Stephen	4th	8
Calvin	5th	16
Thomas	6th	32
Betfield	7th	64
Bittfield	8th	128
Stephen	9th	256
Stephen	10th	512
William	11th	1024 people

. . . then we find that Vanessa has 1024 ancestors in her eleventh generation back, assuming no "converging lines." Even though this arithmetic seems simple enough, it is worthwhile translating this into even simpler English. About one thousand people living less than four hundred years ago in about 1600 had a direct genetic effect on Vanessa Barth, and of course the same is true for all of us. Of this 1024 of Vanessa's ancestors who were alive in about 1625, 512 or half are the ancestors of Vanessa's mother Ramona Sawyer Barth, and of these we know about 106, or nearly twenty-one of all Ramona's ancestors in her tenth generation.

In Vanessa's eighth generation back, Bittfield's, there are 128 ancestors total, of which half, 64 are Ramona's, and of these 38 or sixty percent are known (more now as of 1994, as I haven't counted recently). In many cases quite a lot is known, not just dates of birth, marriage, and death. In Vanessa's 7th generation back, Betfield's, there are 64 ancestors total, of which 32 are Ramona's, all of whom are known. The numbers of known ancestors given above could very likely be increased by further research, as additional information should be fairly readily available on some of the present gaps in our knowledge of Sawyer family ancestry.

Some people's interest in ancestry is primarily focused on tracing down one particular name to the dawn of history. Many of Ramona Sawyer Barth's ancestors can be accurately traced back to the 1300's and 1200's, and even to the 1100's in a few cases. But this does not seem especially interesting to me. Everyone has an illustrious ancestor someplace, if they just could trace backwards far enough. But you can see from the numbers above that if that ancestor were back in your 20th past generation, let alone your 30th generation back, he or she would only be one among a truly gigantic number of genetic contributors, so his or her contribution to you would be proportionally small. It seems more interesting to know as much as possible about one's entire ancestry, and in this respect Ramona and most of the Sawyer family are very fortunate. It is worth noting, as an example, for the sake of comparison, that on Vanessa's father's side, we have so far been unable to learn of any ancestors beyond her fourth generation back, and in the fourth generation, not all her ancestors are known. This is probably about average for most people. Most people know their grandparents, and often their great grandparents as well. But surprisingly few seem to know anything at all beyond. Sadly, when this information is lost, a vast amount of potential information about one's living relatives is also lost.

We have been unusually fortunate in being able to compile the relatively complete family record contained within these pages. However, keeping track of this family's growth in the future will probably be exceedingly difficult despite the existence of so many new research tools mentioned previously. Towards the end of this century, rapid transportation has become so universally available that not only have many families spread out across the country, but it has become commonplace for families to move from one part of the country to another several times in the course of one generation, making the maintenance of genealogies increasingly difficult.

ISABELLE AND VIOLA'S DESCENDANTS NOT YET RESEARCHED

Regarding the descendants of Isabelle Sawyer Parker, we know of at least three people reported by Roland D. Sawyer in 1928 who may have had or did have descendants, and there very likely may have been some others in the same generation born after 1928. The first of these was Ethel Bryant and Winifred Dexter, who had one son Winifred M. Dexter born 1916. The second of these was Fred E. and Edith Bryant who had at least one daughter Phyllis D. Bryant, born in 1923. The third of these was Isabel Bryant and Carl Chase, who had one daughter Elizabeth M. Chase, who was born 1924. Within the last few months we have found Elizabeth Chase, who is now age 70 and living in Derry N.H. She was never married and has no children, so this leaves only the first two mentioned above who may have descendants. Even if we assume children of these two, it is hard to know how to find them, without knowing names or where they were born. Of the daughters, one can try to find them single, though it is far more likely they are married, and then it is very hard to find them without knowing at least the family name of the husband. Our best lead on this branch until very recently was the fact that according to social security records, Isabel Bryant Chase died as recently as 1981 in Derry, N.H., which is where she lived sixty years ago. Although this did lead to her daughter Elizabeth, it has so far not lead any further. Unfortunately Elizabeth's phone is unlisted, and attempts to contact her in other ways have so far failed. We believe that she did receive at least one message regarding interest in her branch of the family. However, she was apparently suspicious of such interest on the part of people she did not know and has so far not responded. Eventually more may be learned about Isabelle's descendants from Elizabeth.

Regarding Viola Eastman Sawyer Grant's descendants, we have essentially zero clues to pursue to date.

Although I think most people who work hard at something would like to do the best job they can, I don't think that simply because I have made a good beginning, that I am obligated to make this a life's work, nor that I am obligated to postpone indefinitely publishing a great deal of information, simply because it is incomplete. I am rather hoping that further information will eventually be revealed as a result at least partially of my publishing the information contained in this book.

CONCERNING SOURCES AND ACCURACY

In concluding this introduction, a word about sources and accuracy is in order. Some historians feel that to publish any fact without providing sources for it is unscholarly and unthinkable. However, genealogy is almost always a labor of love. Only a minuscule number of genealogists make any money at it. The rest of us unfortunately lose considerable money at it, not to mention considerable amounts of time. And has anyone heard of any institution of higher learning awarding a degree in Genealogy? Therefore, I think we Genealogists are on our own, and not beholden to the arbitrary standards of others. Only those who themselves have undertaken projects of this scope can appreciate the tremendous amount of work involved. And often this work is made more difficult by the numerous obstacles created by family members with private agendas. Some wish to hide the fact that a particular child has a particular parent. Some wish to hide the fact that they or someone close to them had a particular spouse. Some simply wish to forget entirely and wish history to forget entirely that they were ever connected with a particular family. Some are simply distrustful of anyone they do not know personally, even a relative, or sometimes especially a relative. Such "human" factors can make the labor of recording the history of living generations a trial, as all genealogists know.

This writer's motives were curiosity, the desire to preserve the work of his esteemed predecessor Roland D. Sawyer, plus the desire to preserve information for the use of future generations who might be interested. I hope that any descendent who wishes to verify or go beyond information contained in this book will find the guideposts contained herein both useful and sufficiently accurate. It was certainly my intention to achieve the maximum accuracy possible. However, when dealing with 1300 to 1400 descendants, perhaps half living, minor errors are bound to creep in, despite editing efforts to comb them out, plus continual cross-checking inherent in the process. People are often reluctant to volunteer information for various reasons, but they will always speak out loudly when you tell them something about their family that they regard as incorrect. Much of the information gathered here was collected verbally by telephone from the family members themselves, and I, like most genealogists in general, was obliged to rely on the integrity and accuracy of his informants, even while recognizing that in some few cases people are determined to obscure some portion of the factual record.

Recording all sources would have greatly increased the length of the finished book and its cost, plus the effort and time required to complete the task would probably have postponed publication until the next century, and possibly into some other writer's lifetime. It is fairly commonplace for genealogical researchers to discover hidden, lost, or forgotten collections of documents and artifacts relating to family history, which people have simply put aside indefinitely, because they feared they could not deal with the material with the degree of scholarship they imagined the world at large expects. Thus, vast amounts of family history are simply lost forever. I find this sad. Genealogy should not be about proof! It should be about painting a picture, and hopefully inspiring others to paint their own pictures, and filling in further details. Just as Roland D. Sawyer's work lead to this work, basically because I found it worthy of continuing, I hope this work may eventually lead to other work. In our own place and period of history, namely 20th Century America, even the most humble individual will leave extensive documentary evidence of his or her passing. Thus, it should be a relatively easy task for others in future generations concerned with sources to verify the facts recorded herein. I myself know, if others do not, the degree of effort required to produce this work, and I find it sufficient. If there are those who will read this hereafter who should be inspired to produce a fully sourced and annotated version, I applaud them and offer them permission to do so, using this text, if they wish.

The Thomas Warren Sawyer Branch of Betfield's Descendants

by Howard U. Gant

The Sawyer family had lived for a hundred and sixty years in the West Newbury area of northeastern Massachusetts and nearby southern New Hampshire, when Betfield and Hannah (Thompson) Sawyer decided to move further North up into the mountains around New Chester and begin a homestead for their children. This beautiful area of central New Hampshire, not far from the Merrimack River on the side of old Ragged Mountain, shortly thereafter became the town of Hill, N.H.

There in Hill, Betfield's grandson Thomas Warren Sawyer was born on November 25, 1827, one of the twelve children of Thomas and Joanna (Scribner) Sawyer. Thomas W. was born on a Sunday, the Sawyer family being an honorable religious family.

Thomas Warren Sawyer usually went by his middle name. Our little "Warren" started his life on his father's farm. In some respects it was a good life, but hard work was everyone's task. First forests had to be cleared to make fields, roads built, crops had to be planted and harvested, and there were always the many animals to be tended. In addition to farming, the Sawyer family was involved in the trade of shoemaking (leather work), and they established a sawmill. The frontier was slightly safer at this time, however it was still wilderness fraught with danger. "Warren's" grandparents, parents, and siblings were very close. Mutual helpfulness as well as long hard toil insured their survival.

Not much is known about Thomas Warren Sawyer as an individual, but much is known about his family collectively. Their West Newbury, Massachusetts ancestors were Quakers. They were people of a strong faith, honest and hard-working. Most had little education.

"Warren's" brother Betfield, named for his grandfather, drowned at age seventeen, near Danbury, and a sister Betsy, died at age sixteen. They were close in age to Warren. Life was not easy. However, their freedom and independence, the hunting and fishing, the social gatherings, their love for family and friends, they had known for years. All helped to make a quality of life that was quite satisfying to the soul, in one of the most beautiful and unpolluted regions of our country. From time to time, they could always travel down to the southern part of the state, to visit friends and family by the seashore. Their values of decency, honesty, and industry were taught to their children at a very young age, for these wilderness inhabitants with large families had to struggle with life and the elements for the common goal of survival and a hope for happiness and prosperity.

Yet in many ways Thomas W. Sawyer seemed destined to live a tragic life. He was married three times, but he never seemed to acquire a farm or homestead for himself. His first wife, Lucy P. Sleeper (1832-1856), died rather young, perhaps in childbirth. This union produced a son they named George (1852-1918), and a son they named Charles, who died a few months after his birth in 1856.

Thomas Warren's second wife was Mary E. Danforth, of Danbury, New Hampshire. The marriage ceremony was performed on August 12, 1859, by Rev. Holman of Nashua. Warren at the time was living in Andover, New Hampshire. From this short marriage another son, whom they also named Charles, was born on June 4, 1862 in Hill. This was during the Civil War. It seems that no one from the Sawyer family served in the Civil War.

US census records for 1860 and 1870 suggest that Warren was unable to keep his two sons, George and Charles, residing with him. These censuses show George Sawyer living with an elderly woman named Sleeper, who was probably his grandmother.

Neither Mary E. Danforth Sawyer's date of death nor her burial place have yet been located. But in 1869, Thomas Warren Sawyer chose Abby M. (Dunkley) Morgan (1835-1881) as his third wife. Abby was from East Haverhill, N.H., the widow of Cyrus Morgan (1826-1867). Abby also had family connections in the Bow, New Hampshire area. Abby already had two little daughters from her marriage with Cyrus. One of these, Mettie, born in 1860, died in 1867, and was buried next to her father in the quiet Alexander Cemetery above the Merrimack River in Bow, N.H. This cemetery is on the River Road, not far from "Dunkley Road," and also not far from the early Colby and Dunkley family farms, who were Abby and Warren's ancestors. Abby's other daughter, Olive Morgan (1865-1886) became a half-sister to Abby and Warren's two children, who arrived shortly after their marriage, while they were living in Sanbornton, N.H.

The US Census of July, 1870 shows Thomas Warren Sawyer and his new wife, Abby, living alone, with no others in their household. On November 17, 1870, Thomas Warren's first daughter was born, and they named her Bella A. Sawyer. The 1880 census has her listed as "Abbie," nine years old, living with her mother, Abigail Sawyer, her brother, Thomas, age six, her half-sister, Olive Morgan, age fourteen, and her Aunt Flavia (Dunkley) Sargent, and the head of this household, Arthur Sargent, machinist.

The above information proved to be quite important in confirming Thomas Warren Sawyer Jr.'s strong belief that he and his sister Bella, were full brother and sister, with Thomas Warren and Abby as their parents. A slightly careless distortion of the truth is evident when one reads Bella's death certificate, which states that "Mary Danforth Sawyer was her mother." The source for this error possibly came from an informant who had read R. D. Sawyer's genealogy, which also stated Mary Danforth as Bella's mother. Finding Mary E. Danforth's death record or tombstone would end the controversy. But frankly, the above information seems to bear out Bella's brother Tom's insistence that he and Bella's mother was Abby.

The picture is one of a continuing struggle against poverty. Thomas Warren Sawyer drowned on January 28, 1873, two months before the birth of his little son Thomas Warren Sawyer, Jr. (1873-1953). There was some mystery surrounding Thomas Warren's death by drowning in Tilton, N.H. at age forty-five. He was laid to rest in the Congregational Church cemetery in East Andover, N.H. next to his first wife, Lucy (Sleeper) Sawyer, and their infant son, Charles. Thomas Warren's parents are buried just a little west of the church, in the larger East Andover cemetery.

Thomas Warren Sawyer lived his entire life in the Hill region of New Hampshire, never owning his own farm, probably renting in one or another of the surrounding towns. His early death plunged his widow Abby and their three children further into poverty. Warren's two older sons, George and Charles, were also, more or less, on their own, though there were always Sawyer family nearby, who could help. Abby M. (Dunkley) Morgan Sawyer sought shelter with her beloved sister, Flavia (Dunkley) Sargent. But eight years after the death of her husband, Abby too died, at the age of forty-seven, and at that point all of the children of Thomas Warren Sawyer, Sr. became orphans.

Abby's parents, Moses and Lucy W. (Jeffers) Dunkley, of East Haverhill, N.H. brought her remains back to the little farming community where they lived. It is very peaceful to be in that quiet cemetery to read the epitaphs of this loving mother, buried next to her parents. And a few more clouds had to be braved by this family of Sawyers.

Abby (Dunkley) Sawyer's ancestry was rich in historic New England surnames. She was directly descended from the Colby, Carr, Chase, Jeffers, French, Blaisdell, Wilson, and Platts families, and she had common ancestors with her husband in the Colby and Blaisdell families. In death, Abby (Dunkley) Sawyer had come home to the fields of her childhood. Olive, her only surviving daughter from her first marriage to Cyrus Morgan, died in 1886, at the age of twenty-one, and was buried with her father and sister in the cemetery in Bow, N.H.

Thomas Jr. and his sister, Bella A. Sawyer went to live with relatives. One legend tells of little Thomas deciding to strike out on his own at the age of about twelve. When Uncle Clem Sawyer and Aunt Fannie A. (Roberts) heard that he was hungry and cold in Boston, they went and brought him back to Goffstown, N.H. to live with them. They were childless and Tom found a home with them. For a good part of his life, Goffstown was a home for Tom and his family. Many Sawyer family reunions were held in that town, and Uncle Clem and Aunt Fannie were hosts for many.

The two young siblings, Bella and Thomas, were separated for a while, as Bella went to live with another aunt and uncle in Manchester. It was said that this particular aunt and uncle had a store there. To the end of their lives, Bella and her brother Thomas, were very fond of each other.

Their two older half-brothers, George & Charles Sawyer, also moved down to southern New Hampshire. In fact, the history of this Betfield Sawyer branch shows that the experience of homesteading the north country lasted about one hundred years, and after that most, if not all of the Sawyers were back down from whence they had started, to where the Merrimack River empties into the Atlantic Ocean, near the Massachusetts-New Hampshire border.

Roland D. Sawyer wrote in his notebook that George "was a character and a genius. He was reared by his over-kindly Sleeper grandparents, and inherited their money before age twenty-one, but he put this through [spent it all?]. He then went West to work for Studebaker in Elkhart, Indiana, and learned the trade of carriage painter. He returned East in 1886 to Amesbury, MA and secured work as a striper or varnisher, and was considered the best 'striper' in Amesbury. He made his home there in Amesbury for a while with his cousin Stephen of Kensington, then moved to Lowell where he lived for many years. In 1914 he turned up at Stephen's again, spent the winter, got on his feet, and set up in auto-painting. He was a genial companion, and an intelligent conversationalist; but whenever he got much ahead he reverted to his early days and blew it in." Apparently George never married, and he had no children. He died and is buried in Exeter, N.H.

Charles, born in 1862, married Cora Estelle Hall at Concord, Feb. 9, 1882. Their child, Estelle May, was born Nov. 7, 1884. Estelle May never married, and moved to Washington, D.C. with her parents. They found good employment there. Estelle May Sawyer was always friendly with her Aunt Bella, and made many visits to the home of her Aunt Bella and vice versa. Estelle died in Washington, D.C. in the 1960's and she left a will.

Bella A. Sawyer, after the death of her mother, moved to the city of Manchester to live with her uncle and aunt. Photos show Bella at age twenty to be quite attractive. She was bright and artistic and only four feet ten inches tall. When she was twenty-one she met the man who changed her life, and poverty was no longer a problem.

On October 10, 1892, Bella A. Sawyer became the bride of Almon Dobbins Page, who was then aged thirty-two, and who worked as a General Sales Manager. Almon was a man of sterling character, whose life was in many ways had been similar to Bella's. He too had lost his father, Truman Page, in a tragic way. Truman was a corporal in the Michigan Cavalry and was killed in the Civil War. His mother had also died at age forty-seven after heroically getting her family a good start. They both were from the earliest New England families. Almon's ancestors were the Wilkins, Kendalls, Bradfords, Brooks, Baxters, Hutchinsons, etc. Almon's step-father was the Rev. Jesse E. McAllister, a friend of his grandfather, Rev. Jacob Dobbins of the Michigan Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church. Albion College, in central Michigan, was where Almon was sent to gain an education.

Almon was a bright, industrious young man of thirty-two and had a fine position with General Electric Company, Edison Lamp Works Division in Newark, New Jersey. He was an employee and friend of Thomas A. Edison. The home Bella moved to as a young bride was in Newark, N.J. They soon had everything going for them: a big home, automobiles, four children, modern conveniences, and good educations for the children. Vacation travel took them far and wide, to Lake Ontario in summer, to Florida in winter, and with always a trip back home to see the Sawyer family in New Hampshire. Their children were Robert Sawyer Page, Elizabeth Page, Beatrice Page, and Almon D. Page, Jr., who still lives along the New Jersey seashore.

At his retirement in 1922, Almon D. Page Sr. moved with his family down to the southern part of rural southern New Jersey to a small town named Clayton (formerly Fislerville). It was here that his children married. Almon had purchased a huge estate called "Grove Lawn." It was the former mansion of a glass manufacturer named John Moore. Sitting on fifty-eight acres, the estate had mature trees and lawns and shrubs of many varieties. Almon wanted to farm a little and raise chickens. I suppose he was, in a way, going back to what his life had been as a boy in Hillsdale County, Michigan. He enjoyed his retirement. An incurable entrepreneur, for the next twenty years he kept busy. The Grove Lawn Tea Room was quite a nice restaurant he owned on the side of his mansion. He farmed, raised poultry, sold travel trailers, sold antiques, etc. Soon there were twelve grandchildren. That estate, with its fifty-eight acres, barns, garages, tool rooms, chicken houses, and trees and woodlands, was one of the finest places any children could grow up. Mr. Page even owned an ice cream parlor near the front of the property along the highway. His grandchildren never really lacked for desserts. Golf was a passion for Mr. Page. He had been to many tournaments. His son, Robert, built and raced speedboats and sailboats. He had learned engineering at Cornell University and spent many years managing his father's estate.

Toward the middle of 1936, Bella became ill and was never to recover. She grew many flowers in the flower beds at Grove Lawn, and had a hired hand to help her. Her favorites were the roses and violets. About that time a grandson, Charles Messmer, was killed by an auto in Miami where the family was spending a few weeks during the winter of 1933-34. From these experiences you never fully recover. Bella A. Sawyer Page died on October 24, 1938. World War II was about to start and the carefree days and nights of those happy times at Grove Lawn were about to end. All over America people were gearing up for a long siege. Rationing and glum news about the war was on the radio. Everyone was going into the armed services or into defense work. School children went to school, and for the most part were spared the agony of their European and Asian counterparts. But Grove Lawn was never the same. A few of Almon and Bella's grandchildren entered the services. Some of the adults entered defense work. Mr. Page's traveling days were over. He loved his family and his estate. He had lifted himself up by his bootstraps to amazing heights. He had done so much, and had seen the heights and the depths of life. More importantly, he seemed to have the wisdom to understand it all. God had blessed his life. His death was on March 3, 1944 at his home in Clayton.

His grandchildren were:
Betty Messmer (1923-Charles Messmer (1926-
Robert R. Page (adopted) (1927-1977)
Jesse Robert Gant, Jr. (1926-Isabel K. Gant (1927-
Howard U. Gant (1928-
Donald F. Gant (1930-1995)
Rev. Edwin Page Gant (1935-
Carol B. Gant (1939-
Mary Elizabeth Gant (1946-1947)

Many of Almon and Bella's descendants still live in South Jersey area. The Grove Lawn estate was sold in 1945, and the mansion itself was demolished in 1971. Mr. and Mrs. Page are buried in Clayton.

Thomas Warren Sawyer, Jr. (1873-1953) was the only other child of Thomas W. Sawyer, Sr.'s marriages who married and had children. Thomas Jr., who became a machinist, married Ellen King, daughter of Arthur and Mary A. (Squire) King, of Philadelphia, PA. They were married in New York, N.Y. on December 13, 1902, not far from his sister Bella's home. At that time Thomas Jr. was also working with Thomas A. Edison (G.E.). Bella and Almon probably attended the ceremony and joined in the celebration. From this marriage Tom and Nellie produced three children, Gloria (1904-1995), Flavia (1909-1986), and Warren King Sawyer born 1915, who now lives in Zephyrhills, FL.

Gloria Sawyer grew up in the Goffstown area and married Robert Kelley, but they had no children. She worked for many years as an executive secretary.

Flavia Sawyer married Carl Hardy, and they resided in Goffstown. Their two children were Caroline and Edith Hardy. Caroline married a Mr. Quinn and Edith married Mr. James Miller. They both have moved from N.H. to the mid-west. Flavia died in Goffstown in 1986.

Warren King Sawyer also grew up in the Goffstown area, and married Eugenia M. Pennewart, a nurse of Dutch descent, daughter of Richard and Rosine (Rogiers) Pennewart of Chelsea, MA. Warren became a successful independent grocer, and retired to Zephyrhills FL, where he grows fruits and vegetables in the back yard. Warren and "Jeanne" have two sons and six grandchildren.

Their son Thomas Warren Sawyer, born in 1937, married Elizabeth Hair, and lives in Bloomsbury, New Jersey, where he is a teacher and high school administrator. He and Elizabeth have two children, Scott Sawyer and Shawn Sawyer.

Warren King and Eugenia Sawyer's second son Richard Warren Sawyer, born in 1939, married Jean Kelleher and lives in Hampton, N.H. They have four children, Paula, Stephen, Kevin, and Vickie Sawyer, who have all finished college. Amazingly, Richard and his family are living in the same area where his immigrant ancestor William Sawyer began his American experience three hundred and fifty years ago where the Merrimack River joins the Atlantic Ocean.

Genealogy sometimes gets bogged down with statistics. But as Rev. Roland D. Sawyer proved, a short, concise, accurate history of your family, sprinkled with tragic or humorous anecdotes, can make fascinating reading. Our ancestors, with their love for their families, constantly sacrificing, giving, providing for their loved ones, is a heart-warming, truthful story. The Sawyer family of New Hampshire, who were never very far from the evergreen forests and winding Merrimack River, have thousands of descendants throughout America today. We seek to learn more about these brave pioneers, whose sacrifice, toil, care, and prayers have made our lives what they are today.

COLLECTED WRITINGS ON THE SAWYER FAMILY

by Roland Douglas Sawyer 1874-1969

Betfield Sawyer of Hill

Betfield Sawyer was a descendant of William Sawyer of Newbury, Mass., one of the 67 original settlers of that town. William Sawyer settled in the Upper Woods, now West Newbury. He arrived there in 1644, having been in Salem in 1642 and Rowley in 1643. He had 12 children, some of whom are buried in the Sawyer Hill cemetery, now the Moses estate.

The youngest son, Stephen, became a Quaker; he lived in the West parish in the Turkey Hill district, and married Ann Bittsfield-Titcomb, from whom the later "given-name" found in the family, and variously spelled, Beetfield, Betfield, Bitfield, etc. Stephen gave land for the Quaker meeting house, which was taken down in 1920. A grandson of Stephen by name of Bitfield, married Sarah Colby, a daughter of Nathaniel Colby in Newton, N.H., and thus were linked together two old-time pioneer families, for Sarah Colby was a great-granddaughter of Anthony Colby, who in 1655 bought from Goodman Macy, the Macy-Colby house in Amesbury, from which Macy had been driven in 1654 because of his harboring a Quaker, an event immortalized in Wittier's poem, "The Exiles."

Thus back of Betfield Sawyer lay four generations of men accustomed to wrestle with the harsh nature of New England for a living. He and the generations of men and women that settled upper New Hampshire were the survival of the fit - weaklings died off, only those able to withstand hardship lived - and of such were the hardy men and women who left the coast and located in the town of Hill and other like towns.

The study of ancestry is not a mere fad, it is a labor of love and gratitude. How much we owe those rugged men and women, and how little we know about them. Only to a few who carefully gather up the few facts that can be obtained, do their names mean more than the names of their patriarchs in the chronology in the early chapters in Genesis, "they were born, married, begat children, died." We have been in America only ten generations at the most, and yet already we forget the brave men and women, who by their struggles and sacrifices, made America possible. It is therefore not alone a matter of filial respect, but of common gratitude and decency, that we recover, so far as we can, the story of our ancestry. And of this rest assured, that once well started, the study of family history no longer remains a dry subject; but has sufficient of scientific research to hold one's interest. And as one studies the life of his forebears, and sees how their influence comes down to himself, the study of family history can grow into a thrilling pursuit.

Peace between French and English was made in 1763, and upper New Hampshire was opened to settlers. In 1765 we find three white men on the Bristol side of Hill; Capt. Cutting Favor, Carr Huse, and John Tolford, Jr. They returned south, but in 1767 Favor and Huse made permanent settlement. By 1773 there were 37 male land-owners, a grist-mill, and a saw-mill in the settlement. In 1776, they petitioned for incorporation, and in 1778 became a town under the name of New Chester. New Chester was one of the mother towns; Bristol, Bridgewater, and parts of Wilmot and Danbury came from the old town. In 1819 the town was renamed after Gov. Isaac Hill. Thus the town was in its prosperity when Betfield Sawyer was the village shoe-maker, and the names in the old account book, are the daughter-towns as well. They were the men who felled the trees, burned their trunks, planted rye, raised turnips, and reared a civilization in the wilderness. Betfield Sawyer was born in Newton, N.H., March 25, 1774. June 17, 1793, he married Hannah Thompson, in that town. Hannah Thompson was from Kingston, where her family were neighbors with the family of Ebenezer Webster, the ancestor of Daniel Webster.

[There are many references in Roland D Sawyer's writing such as the one above to a family connection between Sawyers and the family of the statesman Daniel Webster b. 1782. Ebenezer Webster b. 1667, son of Thomas, settled in Kingston in 1700, and had nine children all born there. Ebenezer (1st) died there in 1736, so undoubtedly some of his descendants were still there 50 years later when Hannah Thompson was born in 1776. However, probably not the line of Daniel Webster. RDS was a knowledgeable genealogist, and thus he probably knew the exact Daniel Webster connection. However, admiring Daniel as he did, he seems to have liked to "obscure" the exact details. He did this to the extent that some of his children were convinced Daniel Webster was a direct ancestor of the Sawyers. But this was not so. The facts are that the Ebenezer (1st) above of Kingston had a daughter Hannah Webster, born 1721 in Kingston, who married Samuel Scribner and became Juanna Scribner Sawyer's grandmother. The same Ebenezer (1st) had a son Ebenezer (2nd) b. 1714 who was Hannah's brother, and he in turn also had a son Ebenezer (3rd) b. 1739. This last Ebenezer (3rd) was known as Captain Ebenezer Webster, and he was a first cousin of Juanna's father, Ebenezer Scribner. It was this same Capt. Ebenezer Webster who married (second) Abigail Eastman and became the father of Daniel Webster and 9 others. Thus Juanna Scribner Sawyer was a second cousin of Daniel Webster. To belabor the point, as RDS does a little, that Betfield's wife was from Kingston where the Webster ancestors settled three quarters of a Century earlier, and that Betfield himself came from Newton, which was only a few miles from Kingston, and that some of them eventually ended up being neighbors 100 years later, and fifty miles or so to the North is mostly Monday-Morning-Quarter-backing. It is true, however, to say that Daniel Webster was born and raised in Salisbury only about six miles, according to RDS, from where his second cousin Juanna Sawyer settled when Daniel was about 15. J.N.]

On May 24, 1792, Betfield's grandfather, (Nathaniel Colby) had deeded to him, the Colby home in the Carter Village, and to that home the groom, aged 19 years, took his bride. There a year later was born their first son, David Colby Sawyer, and later another son Thomas, and two girls, Polly and Hannah, the former of whom died when a few months of age. Betfield Sawyer sold his Newton home to Benjamin Hoyt in December 1799 for $350. [elsewhere, see below, RDS states the proceeds from this sale were $270. JN] , and with his worldly effects loaded on an ox-sled, the little family moved up to Hill, or New Chester as it was then called.

On the back of the ox-sled Betfield had built a wicky-up to shelter his family during the journey. Little David, five years of age, spurned the wicky-up. He insisted in riding outside with his father. There was only one incident which occurred on the way. Little five-year-old David disappeared. His father thought he had gone into the wicky-up, but when he stopped the oxen for a breathing spell, he found this was not so. Little David was not there. Telling his wife, Betfield started back on foot to find David. In telling the incident a great many times in later years, he said he must have gone back at least four miles before he spied "the little shaver" stubbing along in the ox track, as bravely and unconcerned as though it were a common occurrence. He declared he was not tired, and walked on his own feet to join the sled. [This incident is sometimes ascribed to Thomas in stead of David, so I have gone to some trouble to check it, and RDS definitely tells it of David. JN]

Family tradition says Betfield Sawyer moved to Hill in 1797; though the date of the sale of his house at Newton would indicate 1799. At any rate, it was in the middle of a New Hampshire winter that the young father and mother and their two boys, (and perhaps infant girl), climbed over Tucker Mountain to rear their temporary log-cabin for the winter. That first home was well up the side of Ragged mountain, but when spring came the pioneer came back a little and built his permanent home on the site, where now [in 1930?] is but a cellar-hole and a few rotting beams.

Before me as I write is the account book of Betfield Sawyer, New Chester, 1815. On the index pages are the names of the 85 men and women, with whom he, as the town shoe-maker, carried on his accounts. Among the names are Webster, Stevens, Bailey, Sargent, Forbes, Thompson, Sanborn, Wells, Searl,

Mann, Quimby, Ray, Rowell, Ladd, Joslyn, Colby, Dearborn, Norris, Babcock, Hoyt, Lovering, Hunkings, Weare, Eastman, Wadleigh, Smith, Dow, White, Davis, Huntoon, Blanchard, Rand, Tyler, etc. All are the Anglo-Saxon names of that sturdy band of pioneers who went up into New Hampshire and planted there the civilization that became the greatness of America. Among those who came out the six miles to have shoes and boots made and mended was the family of Daniel Webster, and they paid part in cash and part in the product of their farm; also the Scribners, from whom came the founder of the Scribner's magazine. There are four "captains," several "lieutenants" among the men. As one reads the pages of this book, his heart grows that it is the account of one of his forebears - here indeed we find that "Rugged peasantry, a country's pride - which once destroyed, can never be supplied."

Betfield Sawyer had three boys. David, Luther, and Thomas, and as they grew, the family income was added to by their labor, and we find noted where one or other of them labored from dawn till dark with the yoke of oxen, and received one dollar. Fifty cents was the pay for the day's labor at wood-chopping, hoeing, planting, etc. Pay for daily labor was regulated by a town vote. From breakfast to dark it was 50 cents a day for a yoke of oxen, and the same for a man.

[Betfield's account book provides us interesting insight into the economy of the time.] If Betfield sent out David and Thomas each with a yoke of oxen he got a return of $2.00; and if one had took two yoke he received $2.50; and if he made a pair of shoes besides his other work, he got 50 or 75 cents more. Betfield sold Major Burley Smith a turkey for 50 cents; 100 bricks for 40 cents; charged Smith 35 cents for taking his horse to drive to Grafton and back - total $1.25. Smith squared the account by one half bushel of wheat on April 26, 1814, for $1.25.

Lieut. Enoch Merrill sold Betfield a tanned hide for his shoemaking, $2.20; a sheep skin for 25 cents; a side of upper leather, tanned, for $4.00. Betfield paid by hauling him a load of hay, 1200 lbs. at 50 cents per hundred and 40 cents for the hauling with his oxen.. The prices Betfield got for his shoes is interesting, they run as follows: small shoes for boys, 34 cents; heavy shoes for women, 50 cents; man's calf skin shoes 67 cents; man's cowhide boots, $1.50. Repairing shoes was generally 17 cents (a shilling). He bought untanned hides at 25 cents a pound. Some boots were made for $1.34.

The old form of reckoning money was used for small amounts, "ninepence" was 12 1/2 cents or actually 13 cents; 6 "shillings" were equal to a dollar, or one to 17 cents, and a very frequent sum was two shillings, or 34 cents. When David was 19 and Luther was 14, their father let them out a good deal at 83 cents a day for both. After David was over 20 he got full pay, 50 cents a day. After he was 21 he made the deals himself. Betfield let his horse a great deal, evidently he was a good driving horse. Jonathan Hunkins hired him to take milk to Andover, 14 cents; in return Betfield paid Jonathan 14 cents for his big wagon to go to the mill.

Luther plowed for Moses Colby for two days with two yoke of steers for $2.26. Moses paid back by shoveling dung at 50 cents a day. The big item of exchange was a Spanish milled silver dollar. Betfield went in for some luxuries after 1820. He bought a table and six chairs from James Bailey for $6.25. He paid Captain Phinias Sargent $3.50 for the use of his two seated wagon to take his family to Salisbury Beach; he also paid $2.00 for the use of a chaise to Portsmouth and back. The chaise was a mark of wealth in those days, and it paid a $2.00 excise tax, as an automobile does today. He hired it from Captain Sargent.

Cheese he bought by the whole cheese at 10 cents a pound. Miles Cole was the blacksmith, and accounts with him take the most space in the book. Cole ironed a steer yoke for 33 cents; shod the fore feet of a yoke of oxen for 50 cents. Another blacksmith was Captain Joe Gail; he evidently did finer work. He put a mainspring into a gunlock for 30 cents; sharpened a plow point for 50 cents; made whiffle tree iron for a shilling, etc. The old account book lifts the iron curtain that hides the past, and lets us see life as it was in the country above Concord 150 years ago.

Betfield Sawyer cleared the land, raised his stock, and provided for the four more children born to him there (Luther, Polly, Calvin, Betsy). New Chester voted in 1797 to pay an able-bodied man 50 cents a day, and 50 cents a day for a yoke of cattle. Only from a few days work for the town and for neighbors did the pioneer at first receive any money; but as the boys grew and were able to do farm-work, more and more he fell back upon the trade of making boots, which he had learned in Newton. The Colby property had brought $270 for the buildings and 22 acres - this was the fortune upon which Sawyer went forth to buy and build anew. What hardihood was in the breasts of that pilgrim couple - building a new home, with nothing but their naked hands and hampered by five little ones, and they under 30 years of age.

Betfield Sawyer was a methodical man, and a good writer, though all the literary remains that come down to us are the family Bible and the account-book before me. Money was a scarce article. Work was paid for in barter, and larger transactions were carried on by means of notes. How little we know about the lives of our ancestors. We may have faint recollections of grandparents and traditions of great-grandparents, but back of that we can only reconstruct their lives by a knowledge of the lives of the people of their day. Those generations that made possible the life of today, seem almost as far away from us as the lives of the Hebrew patriarchs of the Old Testament. They lived, made their sacrifices for us, and died. It would seem that decent gratitude demands that we save their memories whenever and wherever we can; town histories and family records are a duty; we should recover all we can of the lives of our forbears.

Betfield Sawyer like the rest of the pioneers, swung the ax in the lonesome forests; his oxen snaked the great trunks into a pile and they were burned; then on the virgin soil, refreshed by ashes, the pilgrim planted his rye and turnips, his major crops. It was a hard and simple life, but a wholesome life, for out of it came America.

Betfield Sawyer died September 10, 1835, aged 61 years, 5 months, 16 days. His wife Hannah died August 25, 1847, aged 71 years. Their bodies were laid side by side in the little family cemetery, where I copied the records in 1909, but which last summer I could not find among the pines in the brief time at my disposal.

Of the eight children of Betfield Sawyer, four died in childhood, and four lived to maturity in the town of Hill. One, Polly, died in infancy, Betsy died at three, Hannah at four, and Calvin lived to six according to one record, to eight according to another. The four little graves beneath the pines tell the story of the tragedy of the large family and hard conditions of living in early New England. Birth control would have been a blessing to the women of colonial New England.

David Colby Sawyer, oldest of the children who grew to maturity, was born in Newton, in 1794. He was happily married to Mary E. _____, until scarlet fever took away their two children; little Mary dying Dec. 30, 1832; and little Luther on Jan. 5, 1833. The former was three years and seven months of age; the latter one year and two months. David Sawyer was a large man, clean shaven, and of intellectual appearance; though uneducated beyond an ordinary schooling of his day, he was a man of considerable thoughtfulness. Following the tragic death of his children, he refused to longer cohabit with his wife, saying (much after the teaching of Tolstoy seventy years later) "what is the use to bring children into the world to suffer and die." He and his wife finally separated and David lived alone at a place called Poverty Pond, where he ran a saw-mill. He later lived near Hill village. In the eighteen fifties David Sawyer became sort of a Universalist preacher, and the two of his sermons which came down to me, show good reasoning, and a quite good literary style. He died in Manchester at the home of his nephew, Weare Sawyer. The crude verses on the old gravestones were also his work.

All three of the sons of Betfield were very robust and strong men. David being tall and large, Thomas and Luther thick-set with strong shoulders. As a lad, Luther was the stronger of the two, and Thomas used to say if he had not been injured, he would have been the strongest man in the state. Luther Sawyer, while mowing in a hot meadow with a gang of men, joined in a race to a certain fallen tree; he was the first to reach it; springing upon it and calling Come on boys, he jumped down to the other side; something gave way - he was taken home and put to bed. The doctors said the caul of the abdomen had become so heated that it gave way. At any rate he was ever after a semi-invalid, lying most of the time on the bed. There he whittled many ingenious things, and made a living by trading cattle, buying and selling, sometimes from description, at other times hitching himself to the window to look upon the cattle. He died at the age of 55, and is buried in the Sawyer graveyard in Hill.

Mary Sawyer married Daniel Loverin, and lived to the age of 48, and is also buried in the Sawyer cemetery at the old homestead.

Thomas Sawyer married Juanna Scribner, and moved about a half a mile from the Betfield place and enlarged a house, where he lived, and where were reared his eleven children by birth, and one other adopted. At one time Thomas Sawyer had the largest barn in Hill. It was burned by lightening and all in it save the oxen in the lot and the sheep and cows in the pasture burned. New lumber was cut, neighbors came from miles around and hewed and helped to build a new barn. Such a life in those days. The resources of Thomas Sawyer, in his ingenuity to conquer vicious horses, refractory oxen, get out of dilemmas, amaze me as I read them from my notes. He died in 1862. His wife Juanna lived till 1875, spending her last years in the home of her youngest son Orrin in Manchester. When Thomas and Juanna lived in Hill their home was a spot where the village prayer meetings were held, and the late Rev. Josiah P. Watson, D.D., told me what a godly women was Mrs. Sawyer, and of how he got his start in life at those meetings.

The following is an excerpt from a letter to me dated 1906 from the same Josiah P. Watson, who was then editor of the Sunday School Literature for the "Christian" denomination, and which pays a fine tribute to Mrs. Sawyer, and also gives us an insight into the life of Hill in 1855.

"While never a pastor of Hill, I began my ministry there, preaching my first sermon at the Sawyer school-house, and I had a fine revival there. The occasion of it all was as follows: In June 1855 Mrs. Sawyer attended a prayer meeting at the house of Elder Jared Green in East Andover, and at the close of the meeting she said to Elder Green, "come up to our school-house and hold a meeting some Sunday." Then turning to me, she said, "When Brother Green comes you come with him." At that moment a voice seemed to come to me, from the south west corner of the ceiling, saying "Go thou." Going home I said to the Lord, "If this voice be in reality a call to preach, give me another sign." After retiring and still praying, there seemed to flash upon the wall of the dark room the words, "Go thou and thou shalt see seven souls converted immediately." The next Sabbath morning I drove over Tucker mountain to Mrs. Sawyer's house and said to her, "There will be preaching at your school-house next Sunday morning and afternoon." "Who will be the preacher?" asked Mrs. Sawyer. "The Lord will send the preacher," I replied. Next Sunday, July 1, 1855, two days after I was 17 years of age at 10:30 I preached at the school-house, went home with Mrs. Sawyer for dinner, and preached again at 1 p.m., the old Yankee custom.

A few weeks later, in September, I held prayer meetings in the home of Mrs. Sawyer, and seven young ladies arose for prayers. The meeting was dismissed, all had gone. I stepped to the well curb, and there the seven young ladies stood at the curb. I said, "If you wish more prayer come back into the house." All did so, and in the parlor we held a prayer service, following which each young lady arose and said, "Jesus has forgiven me." Thus I had my seven promised souls. I mention the incident that it may give some insight into the character of Mrs. Sawyer, one of the most sainted old ladies I have ever known. Through her, I have ever felt the Lord extended his call to me. I have her picture and a letter she wrote to me, in which she called me "her son in the faith." I feel myself indeed to be her son; she was a mother to me indeed, and when I reach heaven I shall search very early for Mrs. Sawyer."

Thomas Sawyer of Hill

"Calvin, Betfield, Weare, Warren,
Luther, Clement, Harvey, Orrin,
Betsy, Jane, and Mary Ann -
The old woman, the old man."

So runs the family verse, which gives in the order of their birth, the children of Thomas Sawyer and Juanna Scribner. [Actually it only gives the order of the males correctly, while ignoring the females. The female order is incorrect, since Mary Ann was born before Betsy and Jane. Mary Ann was born after Betfield, while Betsy came after Warren, and then Jane came after Betsy, and then Luther and so on. JN]

Thomas Sawyer was a very powerful man. Being at the grist mill one day, another bet him a silver dollar that he could not pick up a 400 lb. bag of salt, carry it across the mill, and not set it down. He took the wager, carried the salt the distance, then hung it in the fork of two beams, so not to lose the wager by "setting it down."

Shortly after turning 21 Thomas married, and moved about half mile away from his father, where he bought from a man by name of Small a story and a half house, 2 rooms below and a big room above. He enlarged by one joint the little old house built identically like the Daniel Webster birthplace. The name of the locality was "Tioga Hill" because there lived an old Revolutionary soldier who was with Gen. Sullivan's army of 3000 men who in the summer and fall of 1779 marched into New York state, joined with Gen. James Clinton, and their united army of 5000 invaded the land of the New York Indians who were allies of the English. One of the spots they captured was a "Tioga Hill" on the banks of the Tioga River in the heart of the Indian country, and 120 miles from the nearest white settlement.

Whether this Revolutionary soldier was the Small who built the house that Thomas bought, or another near it, I am not sure. Anyhow he was buried in the Sawyer family graveyard, and only a plain field stone marked his grave, pointed out to me in 1909 by Uncle Clem. 100 yards from the Thomas Sawyer home was the little red school house where the Sawyer boys went to school, and where religious meetings were held from time to time. There on Tioga Hill Thomas and his hard working wife and children found their living, not only for the eleven children of their own, but they adopted a little girl (Viola Eastman) to make the even dozen. Betsy died at the age of 16 and is buried in East Andover; Betfield was drowned in Smith's River, Danbury, at the age of 17, where he was alone in swimming. The other ten grew to maturity, and one Clement Sawyer of Goffstown still lives; a hale, hearty old gentleman of 85.

Thomas Sawyer's only neighbors, as I recall it, were the Hilliard family and the old Revolutionary soldier. The Hilliards had Indian blood in their veins. One of the "Hilliard boys" lived in my day, and acted as my guide trying to find the old place. He had a trait that amazed me - he walked ahead, pigeon-toed, and all the time, or most of it, his head was turned way 'round and he was looking at me and talking with me. I have always wondered if that was an Indian trait. He had coal black hair and beard and Indian eyes. My last visit to the old place was in 1921. I picked up some latches from the doors of the Betfield house, and some from the Thomas house, and some wooden latches of the barn and shed and hog pen, and brought them with me - these with the picture taken of the Thomas house, are all that survives of that house where a family of twelve children and two parents got their living, and sometimes took in a grandchild.

Calvin Sawyer, born 1819, moved down to Haverhill, Mass. to work; he married Azubah Currier and located in Plaistow; he later married Mehitable Eaton of Plaistow and moved to Kensington, N.H.., where he died. He has living three children, seven grandchildren, eleven great-grandchildren.

Weare Sawyer went down to the Massachusetts line for employment, there he married, lived, and died. His children, Mary, Maud, Will, and Arthur all live, and there are also grandchildren.

Warren (Thomas) married Lucy P. Sleeper in Hill; he married also a second time. Three children are living; Charles Sawyer of Washington, D.C., Belle Sawyer Paige of Orange, N.J., Thomas Sawyer of Goffstown. There are also grandchildren.

Isabellé Jane married James Parker of East Andover; of their children, three are living: Clarence Parker of Waltham, Mass., Ferdinand Parker of Boston, Mrs. Rank Meserve of Somerville, Mass., and Mrs. Fred Bryant, Manchester.

Luther Sawyer, born 1834, married Susan A. Littlefield of Danbury. For many years he had charge of a section on the Boston and Maine R.R., and lived at Andover. He died July 4, 1899; his wife died in 1886. Of their children, the eldest Bessie Ellen died in 1892; Orrin L. in 1908. Those living are Lewis E. Sawyer, Fairview, Okla., Rev. Harvey C. Sawyer, Moultonboro; Mrs. George E. Eastman, East Andover, Luther J. Sawyer, Walpole, Mass., and Mrs. William B. Irwin, Worcester, Mass. There are also grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

Clement married Fannie Roberts and both he and Mrs. Sawyer are still living in Goffstown.

Harvey married in Manchester, where for years he carried on a grocery business; both he and his wife are dead and they left no issue.

Orrin also married in Manchester, and while he is dead, his widow and Mrs. Horace Prescott of Manchester, Mrs. William Woodman of Cuba, and Mrs. Sidney Gibson of Alberta, his children survive; there are also grandchildren.

Thus a goodly group of the living could go back to the ruins of that little house on Tioga Hill, and there pay just tribute to the heroic man and woman, who on the side of Ragged Mountain, found a sufficient living to rear twelve children, and send them forth, equipped to wrestle with life. Verily our ancestors in upper New Hampshire were the stuff of which heroes and heroines were made.

Trip to the "North Country" [about 1918] - Visit to Webster's Birthplace

It had been my desire for several summers to camp for a night in Hill, and to see the sun set and rise on the old Sawyer homestead on Ragged Mountain. So when my friend from Boston visited last summer, and wanted to see new London, we hastily made plans for a day, and Monday morning we started out. Myself, wife, little girl Ramona, my brother and my friend, made the party; packed into the Mayflower (made by Henry Ford), we rambled along the way, where 125 years before my ancestor, his wife and two little boys, crawled through almost trackless wilderness with oxen and sled; a pair of venturesome settlers who joined with those hardy people who settled upper new Hampshire. Betfield Sawyer's home was only seven miles beyond that of Captain Webster, and as they were neighbors and [had] married into the same families [see earlier note on Webster connection - J.N.], I had great interest to stop and see the place where the greatest son of the Granite State was born.

It was about three in the afternoon when we halted the Ford beneath the great elm that Captain Webster planted in 1768. When Captain Webster built his log-cabin in the wilderness, no smoke from white man "curled over the frozen hills between it and Canada." But before Daniel was born, the Captain had built the one story frame house which still stands. In that little structure on January 18, 1782, Daniel first opened his wonderful eyes upon the world. When Daniel was but three years of age his father moved to the larger Webster home in the "lower village." This later home was the scene of Webster's early recollections, and he tells us how he and Ezekial lay beneath the roof and heard the rain patter, and listened each morning for the crowing of the neighbor's roosters. And there as a boy he learned to read to teamsters who put up at the nearby tavern, and committed to memory the constitution of the United States. When Daniel was 18 years of age his father again moved, this time to the Elms farm. This third home of the Websters in Franklin was dearly loved by Daniel, and of it he once wrote: "This is the most beautiful spot on Earth." Here lived the youth and young man with his ambitions; here are scenes where he rehearsed his Fourth of July address to be given in Salisbury. This last of the Webster homes is now an Orphan's Home; the second place was torn down; so the only distinctive mecca to which admirers of Webster may travel is the birth-place. And what a shrine it is. To one whose ancestors like my own, had lived in one of these same one-story, two-roomed homes, deep emotions swell within the heart as one stands within the rooms. Over this doorstep the child Webster crawled - and here sat in June, 1851, a man near seventy, and with swelling heart and choking throat, pointed out to his friend the spots where his father, mother, brother - all gone beyond - had worked and loved.

Inside one breathes the air of colonial courage. Here are a few of the tools and utensils of Capt. and Mrs. Webster, of whom Daniel said, "They shrank from no danger, toil or sacrifice, that they might raise their children." Reverently we touched the simple things of that early humble home, put the little girl into the cradle in which Daniel was rocked, went into the cellar, out into the shed, paused by the old well - and as I stepped into the Ford and looked over house and spot, I bared my head and repeated the eloquent words of my friend, the Honorable Samuel McCall, "This is indeed a memorial shrine - where patriotic Americans and lovers of liberty from all lands can gain inspiration for the duties of citizenship and renew loyal devotion to the fundamental principles of a government that typifies what the great Lincoln declared to be, a government of the people, for the people, and by the people."

The birthplace of other great men have been preserved, but America has no other place like the birthplace of Webster - where still on its original site, surrounded by the rugged, untouched natural scenery, we stand in the midst of simplicity and humbleness, made grand and glorious because of him who was born there. Webster called it "Our primitive family abode, to which I make my annual visit, and carry my children, that they may be taught the hardships endured by the generations gone before." Would it not be well for more of us to take our children there for the same purpose?

Trip to the "North Country" - A Night on Ragged Mountain

It was about five when we reached East Andover village, and the kind people at the store advised us that the road over Tucker Mountain was very bad, impassable for an auto. But we had come too far to be daunted, and then again we have great faith in a Ford, and though it took every ounce of juice we could give her, and all waled save me, she went up nobly over the steeps, over Tucker Mountain to the base of old Ragged.

On reaching the sites of those two homesteads we browsed about, picked berries, and as night came on, we kindled a roaring fire before the old house, ate our lunch, and danced around the embers to initiate our friend into the Sawyer clan. Having lived her life in Boston, she had never seen anything quite so wild and primitive as were the overgrown roads and yards and doorsteps. One room was cleared away, a bed of fragrant pine and birch boughs was made, and though it was near twelve ere we slept, we were out in the morning to see the sun-rise, as did our ancestors so long before. We washed in the brook, listened to the birds, smelled the ineffable smell of the heavily dewed woodland and berry bushes, and then got aboard and rambled down to East Andover village to break our fast with our kinsman and to return the axe borrowed the night before.

If I thought of McCall's words as I left the Webster place, I thought of words of Webster, as I left the Sawyer place - those words of tribute to his ancestors, when he said in his Saratoga address in 1840 - "In upper New Hampshire the remains of my ancestor's primitive home still remain. I weep to think that none of those who inhabited it are still alive, and if ever I am ashamed of it, or if ever I fail in affectionate veneration for him who reared and defended it against violence and destruction, and they who beneath its roof cherished every domestic virtue, shrunk from no danger, toil or sacrifice that they might serve their y and raise their children to a condition better than their own, may my name and the name of my posterity be blotted forever from the memory of mankind."

Economic conditions have depleted the old landscape of Hill. One-time well trodden roads are now overgrown; a few scattered stones tell of former location of homes, school-houses, etc., and yet every landmark could tell a story of heroism and sacrifice; of love and loyalty; from which we sprung, and without which we would not be.

East Andover's Little Red School-house

As we rumbled down the hill into East Andover, we halted for a half hour at the most priceless possession of that beautiful little town - its "Little Red School-House." Here it stood, one of the few left of those early buildings that displaced the wandering school teacher who taught in homes of the settlers. The pioneer among the splendid educational institutions that New Hampshire has built. Such an institution as Dartmouth is but the great, grandchild of this humble building. It's well preserved - and as I sat in seats where my ancestors learned the three "R's" a century back, again I took off my hat in reverence.

We stopped at beautiful New London, swam in Lake Sunapee, ate lunch beneath the birches on its shores, and when we got down to Manchester we found we had been having the two hottest days for several summers; but we had never dreamed it - the cool air of the mountains, the breezes of constant motoring, the delights of the trip, these had left us in blissful ignorance of the tricks being played with the thermometer.

What a fine state is New Hampshire! There is no other like it in the Union. What heroes and heroines reclaimed the wilderness for their posterity. Daniel Webster makes us think of the ancient Greek in the glorious days of Athens, and the settlers who located around Ragged Mountain are of the stuff of the earlier Greeks of whom Homer sings. The Webster country is not only a delight in its cool, health-giving airs; it is also an inspiration; and one who visits it, will be refreshed - body and soul.

East Andover Memories of 78 Years Ago

By Stephen Calvin Sawyer, Roland D. Sawyer's father. Written August 15, 1932

Seventy-eight years ago I lived a year in East Andover, N.H., with my aunt Jane Parker and her husband, Jim Parker. Their home was at the head of the pond, a little way from the depot. Some of the clear recollections in my mind are, a near drowning one day when I went to the pond with Grandfather Thomas Sawyer of Hill, and slipped down the bank while swimming. Another is of stealing the Durgin boys' boat and tying it up our side of the pond. Another is being spattered with steam from the engines as the engineer shot it at some of us kids. But the best of my memories are of going down on the Blackwater River and seeing the Indians who came there yearly to make baskets and camp out. The little Indians of a year or two old could swim, as their parents threw them into the water. The old chief would draw a circle about him as far as he could reach with his long arrow and then bet a half dollar that he could shoot the arrow up so straight it would come down within the circle. He was many times taken up, but as I recall it he always won.

Two winters before that I stayed with my grandparents in Hill, and recall the jolly parties of sleigh rides and the religious meetings in the old school house a hundred yards away. Grandsir and Grandma would sit in the old settle before the fireplace and chat with the social neighbors who came in, and I would sit down before the blazing fireplace. Both their house and the old Betfield Sawyer house have fallen down several hundred years ago. Last year Uncle Clem died at 92 years of age, and I at 87 am the only member of my family who can recall these things. I wonder if there are others in Hill or East Andover who recall the visits of the Indians on the Blackwater River and the old chief who won the dollars? John Hilliard of Tioga Hill went out on this river in his canoe one night and shot about 40 musk rats.

Roland D Sawyer & Mary L Palmer, Golden Wedding Anniversary, June 29, 1948

Author Jay Norwalk & wife Natasha Salvo, great granddaughter of above, in 1986

Natasha Salvo & son Simon Norwalk at graves of their 4 & 5 greats grandparents

Thomas and Juanna Sawyer farm in 1903 photo by Roland D Sawyer. Note extensive fields and meadows in background. In 1995 this view is entirely covered with woods and forest. Stone walls in foreground are already half buried in new soil from nearly a century of falling leaves.

1. Betfield Sawyer b. 25-Mar-1774, Newton, Rockingham, NH, occupation shoemaker, farmer, m. 22-Jun-1793, in Kingston, Rockingham, NH, Hannah Thompson, b. 6-Oct-1776, Kingston, Rockingham, NH, (daughter of Thomas Thompson and Judith Blaisdell) d. 25-Aug-1847, Hill, Merrimack, NH, buried: Betfield Sawyer Family Cemetery, Hill NH. Betfield died 10-Sep-1835, Hill, Merrimack, NH, buried: Betfield Sawyer Family Cemetery, Hill NH.

Children:

2. i David Colby b. 9-May-1794.
3. ii Thomas b. 24-Jan-1796.

iii Polly Sawyer b. 6-Mar-1797, Carter Village, Newton NH, d. 23-Dec-1797, Carter Village, Newton NH.

iv Hannah Sawyer b. 18-Oct-1798, Carter Village, Newton NH, d. 1802, ??Carter Village, Newton NH. If buried at Betfield Sawyer Cemetery, Hill NH, no grave marker survives 1995.

v Luther Sawyer b. 1-Jun-1801, Carter Village, Newton NH, d. 3 Jun 1856, Hill, Merrimack, NH, buried: Betfield Sawyer Family Cemetery, Hill NH.

vi Mary Sawyer b. 29-Aug-1804, Carter Village, Newton NH, m. Daniel Loverin. Mary died 13-Aug-1852, Hill, Merrimack, NH, buried: Betfield Sawyer Family Cemetery, Hill NH. RDS says that Mary had several children but that they all died young.

vii Calvin Sawyer b. 3-Dec-1807, Carter Village, Newton NH, d. 23-Jan-1813, Hill, Merrimack, NH, buried: Betfield Sawyer Family Cemetery, Hill NH.

viii Betsy Sawyer b. 9-Mar-1813, Carter Village, Newton NH, d. 23-Apr-1816, Carter Village, Newton NH, buried: Betfield Sawyer Family Cemetery, Hill NH.

Second Generation

2. David Colby Sawyer b. 9-May-1794, Carter Village, Newton NH, m. Mary E Unknown. David died aft 1857, Manchester, Hillsboro, NH. RDS does not give a death date anyplace. He probably lived quite a while after 1857, which is the date on a sermon he wrote when he was age 62, and he is said to have lived a long time. He is probably buried in Manchester where he died.

Children:

i Mary H. E. Sawyer b. 30-Apr-1829, Hill, Merrimack, NH, d. 30-Dec-1832, Hill, Merrimack, NH, buried: Betfield Sawyer Family Cemetery, Hill NH.

ii Luther Sawyer b. 1-Dec-1831, Hill, Merrimack, NH, d. 5-Jan-1833, Hill, Merrimack, NH, buried: Betfield Sawyer Family Cemetery, Hill NH.

3. Thomas Sawyer b. 24-Jan-1796, Newton, Rockingham, NH, m. Juanna Scribner, b. 5-Aug-1800, (daughter of Ebenezer Scribner and Mehitable Tucker) d. 11-Feb-1875, Manchester, Hillsboro, NH, buried: East Andover, Merrimack, NH. Thomas died 11-Jan-1862, Hill, Merrimack, NH, buried: East Andover Cemetery NH. Juanna: RDS put Juanna's birth in 1798. However, Shirley (Winroth) Danahy told Howard Gant the above birth date, and Shirley has seen her birth certificate. As a matter of fact, the absence of the names of any parents on this certificate has caused several people to be uncertain of Juanna's exact ancestry, though her name definitely appears in Ebenezer Scribner's will in several places. Juanna's death at Manchester is assumed, since she lived the last years of her life with her son Orrin, who lived in Manchester.

Children:

11. Orrin David Sawyer b. 11-Apr-1843, Hill, Merrimack, NH, m. 11-Apr-1868, in Manchester, Hillsboro, NH, Ellen Mary Rogers, b. 26-Nov-1847, Manchester, Hillsboro, NH, (daughter of William Moulton Rogers and Sarah Gibbs) d. 21-Mar-1928, Manchester, Hillsboro, NH. Orrin died 3-Mar-1913, Manchester, Hillsboro, NH. Many are confused about the order of the 2 names Orrin and David. It is written many places in both different ways. David Prescott has his marriage license from the middle 1800's, on which it was written Orrin D. Sawyer. This is the earliest documentation I have heard of. Ellen: David Prescott has William M Rogers original will dated 1878, making provision for 3 sons & 1 daughter. 1 son died in 1888. DP also has news clipping marking WM

Rogers 50 th Wedding anniversary. Since WMR died in 1892, his 50 anniver was before that, thus he was married before 1842, possibly as early as 1839, which was at least 5 years before Ellen Mary was born in 1847, proving she was his child. A death notice for Sarah Gibbs in 1893 states she was survived by 2 sons & 2 dtrs, one being Ellen M R Sawyer, the other Mrs Charles Gibbs ???
